

TAKE YOUR VITAMINS

Both the law and common sense tell us that it is wrong to dump a bunch of toxic waste from weird experiments into lakes and rivers. Sadly, the staff at the local vitamin factory decided to be big-time jerks and did it anyway!

Folks knew something was up when the livestock started disappearing. Joe Hickok, whose farm is near the factory, used to have a large herd of 520 sheep. One week after the incident, he took a count and found that there were only 135! How many sheep went missing from Joe's farm?

If that wasn't bad enough, the local rat population has gone berserk. Not only are there way more rats than usual, they are now able to cluster together into shambling monstrosities called "rat kings." It takes about 450 rats to form one of these horrifying creatures. How many rats did it take to make the 8 that are now wandering around town?

A lot of the folks who were illegally dumping toxic waste didn't even bother to wear masks and protective clothing! I guess they thought it wasn't cool or something. Now they have turned into cannibalistic monsters that are running around causing chaos! Of the 215 workers who were involved with the illegal dumping, 76 of them are now drooling beast-men. How many workers remain more or less human?

Good news! It seems that the beast-men and the rat kings really dislike each other. Either that, or they just want to keep the other team from eating the townspeople so they can hog them all for themselves. Whatever the case, the two sides are now battling it out in the streets. Although the rat kings are outnumbered, they are tougher. A single rat king is a match for 9 beast-men. Which side will win this battle royale?

After picking off the surviving monsters, the townsfolk decide to shut down the vitamin factory. It is just too dangerous. Also, they have an offer from a shadowy corporation to use the space for radioactive waste storage. Problem solved!
